Advertising Defended

Tibor R. Machan

*R. C. Hoiles Chair in Business & Free Enterprise, Chapman University's Argyros School of Business & Economics
Chapman University, One University Drive, Orange, CA 92866 USA <tmachan@gmail.com>*

When we try to judge an activity or institution, we need to know what is its nature or purpose. If you travel, to tell how well you are doing it is necessary to know where you want to go. If one wishes to judge parenting or teaching or scholarship, one needs to know what these are so as to determine whether a given instance fulfills its nature, function or purpose.

Unless we know what advertising is, we cannot judge or evaluate it or what others claim about it. One might think here of what is involved in malpractice lawsuits. Malpractice presupposes standards of conduct. Without standards there can be no way to identify and distinguish what is and is not proper conduct, including in a craft or profession.

Before answering, let's consider what advertising does. In a typical ad, people are told of or shown various possible benefits of some service or product, usually with the aid of a gimmick or two. The gimmicks are meant to focus our consciousness and to call attention to the likely benefits of the service or product being advertised.

From this we can conclude that advertising is a form of promotion – moving something ahead positively. It is a call to people to pay attention to some service or product being offered for sale, just in case they may then come to want it.

Advertising is a natural extension of commerce and marketing: the promotion of what is being produced for sale.

Tibor Machan fled Hungary as a boy with the help of a flesh-peddler (or so TIME magazine called folks who made money off liberating people). He then, after having learned firsthand about modern Soviet style Communism, lived under the brutal, Nazi-sympathizing household of his father for three years. In time they all went to the USA, where after six months he took off and became, at age 18, independent and reasonably self-sustaining.

A tour of duty in the US Air Force – with a stint as an actor at Andrews AFB and the welcome liberating discovery of Ayn Rand via his role in The Night of January 16th – acclimated Machan to the West. It also readied him for the academic life, where he earned BA, MA and PhD degrees in philosophy and launched a career that has by now issued in two dozen single author and a dozen and a half of edited books, as well as the co-founding of the mature Reason Magazine, editing of Reason Papers, An Interdisciplinary Journal of Normative Studies, and much else that has been of some help to advancing the cause of liberty and good, sound philosophy.

Machan has lectured around the world on libertarian political philosophy, business ethics, and various philosophical topics. He is as close as it is possible to be a public philosopher, who aside from scholarly works writes newspapers columns and magazine articles, and gives media interviews all the way from Argentina to New Zealand and Greece. He was featured on American ABC-TV journalist John Stossel's prime time TV program, "John Stossel Goes to Washington." C-Span featured him on its May 1, 2011, 3 hour "In Depth" program.

Machan is the R. C. Hoiles professor of business ethics and free enterprise in the school of business at Chapman University, where he also teaches the frosh foundations seminars, the history political philosophy and the philosophies of commercial life. He has written 43 books and edited another 20. His latest book is The Morality of Business: A Profession of Human Wealth Care (Springer, 2011).
